THE STRUCTURE OF VALUE ORIENTATIONS OF FUTURE LAWYERS.

The analysis of the theoretical, scientific and methodological apparatus revealed that the existing approaches in pedagogics laid the theoretical basis for the consideration of professional and valuable orientations of the person as a system, motivating and controlling human activities.

The contradiction in the divergence of individual systems of value orientations and socially important system of professional values of students of the professional education leads to the need to review existing approaches in favour of the axiology.

Axiological approach in the training system of future lawyers, we consider as a position providing personal and professional self-development. Availability of the complete system of professional value orientations means that the objectives, motives and methods of action of the future lawyer correspond to educational requirements, on the other hand the subordination of the system of the main relationships to tasks of professional and personal development has been considered.

Investigation of the features of the legal profession from the axiological position showed that the professional value orientations of the future lawyer include both universal and professional values associated with the content of the legal profession, its meaning, direction and purpose.

The study of the structure of professional value orientations, the identification of the prerequisites for their formation and factors affecting their formation help to identify the conditions necessary for their formation and actualization. Cognitive, psychological, motivational and prognostic components in the process of the study of the structural composition of the professional value orientations of future lawyers have been determined.

Elements of cognitive component is the knowledge of the values of the legal profession and the expertise; psychological – emotional attitude to the legal profession; motivational – motifs associated with the content of legal training and the attitude towards future profession, as well as the motives of achievement, social cooperation and behavior; prognostic – planning of the life activity associated with the image of the future “I”.

Universal and socially important values in the structure of professional value orientations of future lawyers have been defined. It was found that the system of professional value orientations advocates integrating element of social and psychological structure of the personality of future lawyers.
